My Dad was the person that helped me get into the game as a child growing up in Bayville, New Jersey. He was able to share his love for the game and it's become one of my passions ever since. My first golf swing coach was Chris Nelson, PGA member and watching how much he loved the game really influenced my wanting to play the game as often as I could find time. As a result, I applied to the PGA Professional Golf Management University Program at Campbell University, Buies Creek, North Carolina for a major in Business Administration. I achieved my degree on time but because of a double major in the PGA PGM golf program, I was also able to receive my study and credits towards my PGA Class 'A' membership which I achieved in 2022. The PGA sanctioned Campbell University golf management program allowed me to compete within the program and participate in the CUPGM tournament series where I earned multiple wins and achieved more than 10 Top 5 finishes. Just as important as playing experience was the ability to learn from more experienced teachers like David Orr (Golf Magazine Top 100) and Jorge Parada, lead instructor at Liberty National Golf Club and Campbell PGA PGM program graduate.

Throughout my time as golfer, student and professional, I have observed, taken, and given hundreds of lessons. I have learned and continue to learn from these experiences and from these great coaches. Through that period, I have formulated my own teaching philosophy centered around the fundamentals of the game and a methodology that focuses not on teaching my students the game but coaching my students on how they can play their best golf.

Whether you are just beginning your golf journey, are someone that has worked on his game but has plateaued or are simply an accomplished player that needs to sharpen a particular skill, my goal will always be to teach you as an individual not a one-size-fits all method. My preference will always be to maintain and build around your natural strengths and abilities in order to adjust rather than rebuild your entire golf game. I want to help you to understand and simplify what so many people have made too complicated. As a golfer who plays best on swing 'feels' vs. technical swing thoughts, I want to understand your current swing concepts and improve those with correct game information that will help you start your golf journey to playing your best golf. If you have an interest in improving any part of your game (putting, chipping, pitching, bunker play, full swing, or golf course management), come join me in a fun learning lesson environment. As Duke University Golf Club mantra states, let's 'Keep Getting Better Every Day'!

Lessons are given within a private teaching area on the Duke University Golf Club practice range and on the University golf course. As needed, I use high and low technology to help you become the best golfer you can be. Lessons may be arranged by emailing shane.askew@duke.edu.
